

Self-Awareness & Digital Detox: My Journey

Why I Started?

When I asked myself how I really spend my time, I realized that most of it was spent behind a screen, like scrolling, chatting, and escaping. I was constantly online, yet I felt distant from people around me. That's when I understood I needed a digital detox; not just to reduce screen time, but to reconnect with myself and the world beyond my phone.

Screen Time progress (Healthbasics)

Emotional Realization

I noticed that I feel safe when people can't see my real emotions online. But that same comfort makes it hard to connect in person. I'm extroverted on chat, yet quiet in real life; and this detox made me see how much I've been hiding behind my screen.

Things I Tried During My Digital Detox

- Reaching out to people offline: I tried starting small talks and joining real conversations ; at first it felt different but realer than online chats.
- Spending time without my phone: I went for walks, listened to music without scrolling, and let my mind just breathe for once.
- Not replying instantly: It made me realise not every message needs a quick answer — sometimes silence feels lighter.
- Reflecting before unlocking: Each time I picked up my phone, I asked “Do I really need to?” — and that changed a lot.

I used to feel safe behind my screen, but now I want to feel that same comfort face-to-face. I'm still learning, but I'm growing — one unplugged moment at a time.